“Assuring you of our best attention at all times” is the watchword at Murrays department store of distinction.

It’s 1975, and the Edinburgh store – which remains in the private ownership of the Murray family – is preparing to celebrate its centenary. Its current Director, Miss Margaret Murray, is determined to move the creaking building into the 1970s while maintaining its traditional standards and ethos.

Despite its beautiful, inconvenient and theatrical edifice, Murrays is a place largely defined by its staff and customers: drama, comedy and tragedy, large and small, mark each working day. Life, death, laughter and some big surprises are all to be found within the store’s own little universe.

Come on in, let’s see what lies behind the front door...

About The Author

Jane Tulloch was born in Edinburgh in 1954 and has lived there ever since. Under her professional name however, she has travelled widely mostly in relation to her day job working with adults with autism. These travels have taken her to the USA, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Bangladesh, South Africa and various points in between. She writes for relaxation from her work in this demanding but fascinating field. She has worked for the NHS for 30 years but before this worked in a large department store which provided the inspiration for the Murrays series of books.
